About SPOON

Child health programs focus almost exclusively on prenatal care, breastfeeding and nutritional support to children through their families and communities. They do not reach the tens of millions of children living in orphanages and foster homes, nor children with disabilities who are so often kept isolated. SPOON exists to fill this gap. SPOON has uncovered prevalence rates of malnutrition in orphanages as high as 93% in children ages 0-5 years. Such risks extend domestically to children in U.S. foster care and internationally to those with disabilities. Bolstering the capacity of families and communities to care for these children is a vital component to breaking the cycle that perpetuates institutionalization and its devastating impacts.

SPOON spreads our expertise and tools through international and local partners who are already established on the ground, leveraging their regional knowledge, relationships and staff presence to expand more quickly and effectively than we could alone. This strategy, rooted heavily in partnership, allows SPOON to deliver solutions that are locally contextualized, locally owned and sustained over the long term.
